Editorial Review

Review

'Dominic Wyse has created a concise text with the clear aim of improving writing for education students. It is accessible to students who are new to degree studies while containing relevant guidance for writers through to Masters level...the style is engaging and down-to-earth and Wyse is informed and experienced in his topic' - Literacy

'[This book] promotes the importance of thoughtful and thorough reading and research and how to do this critically and attentively... It offers straightforward, practical and sound advice that makes it an effective interactive manual for both new undergraduate and Master's students' - Writing in Education

Praise for the First Edition:

'What a super little book this is. Like Eats, Shoots and Leaves, you pick it up thinking it's going to be dull and very soon you're engrossed... this pocket-sized book will be a boon to anyone writing essays, assignments, reports, research projects, dissertations, and theses' - Sara Bubb, in the Times Educational Supplement

'This book has something to offer almost every student, whether they are making their first attempt at academic writing or are accomplished writers who simply need the occasional point of reference. I will certainly be recommending it to my undergraduates' - ESCalate

'This is a super book. I particularly like the small size which makes it easy for students to keep a copy close to hand at all times. It is well-paced in bite-size chunks with really useful, practical tips for the modern student. The 'Top Tips' are a terrific idea. It will be helpful to all students, not just those in Education disciplines' - Dr Mary Kellett, The Open University

'There are strong links to the writer's own experiences and this immediately means you relate to him, and also believe him! The Key Facts and Top Tips throughout each chapter are great. I wish I had read this at the start of my course!' - Catherine Trew, Student Teacher

About the Author

Dominic Wyse is Professor of Early Childhood and Primary Education at University College London (UCL), Institute of Education (IOE), and Academic Head of the Department of Learning and Leadership.
