Reinventing Vietnamese Socialism: Doi Moi In Comparative Perspective (Economic, Social, and Cultural Change in Asia and the Pacifi) By William S Turley, Mark Selden

Beginning its transition in 1977 from bureaucratic central planning to a market-oriented economy and to a more open political system in 1979, Vietnam initiated a comprehensive program of renovation known as "Doi Moi" in 1986. In this volume, Vietnamese and Western scholars address key issues of reform in Vietnam. The contributors explore the origins of "Doi Moi", the Vietnamese response to the changes sweeping the communist world since the 1970s, and the stresses inherent in the reform process. They also compare "Doi Moi" with other attempts at reform and assess Vietnam's prospects for stable growth and development under communist rule.
